Design Ideology

In a world of increasing complexities, one can easily appreciate the clean aesthetic of a simple structure, open and brutal in its honesty. Our project, the 'White Screen House', located on the Dwarka expressway, Gurugram, adheres to this philosophy dearly. Built for a family of five, it is a home that reflects the merging of three generations- a couple, their two children and mother. The immediate consideration for us, when designing, was to have a well-ventilated structure with minimalism at the core. This guiding thought was a result of our discussions with the client, who reminisced about a childhood spent in courtyards of the traditional houses of Rajasthan.

Site Planning and Zoning

One can see in the layouts, that the space planning is as per the modern lifestyle and client's needs, is a subtle tribute to the traditional courtyard planning. A centrally located and skylit vertical void provides a necessary contrast to the mass and represents the said tribute. The plot is 2194 sq. ft in area, rectangular in bearing and holds the cuboidal house at 15 feet from the front and 7 feet from the rear. This makes for an expansive green area, adding to the aesthetic quotient and cleverly disguising the service area.

GROUND FLOOR PLAN

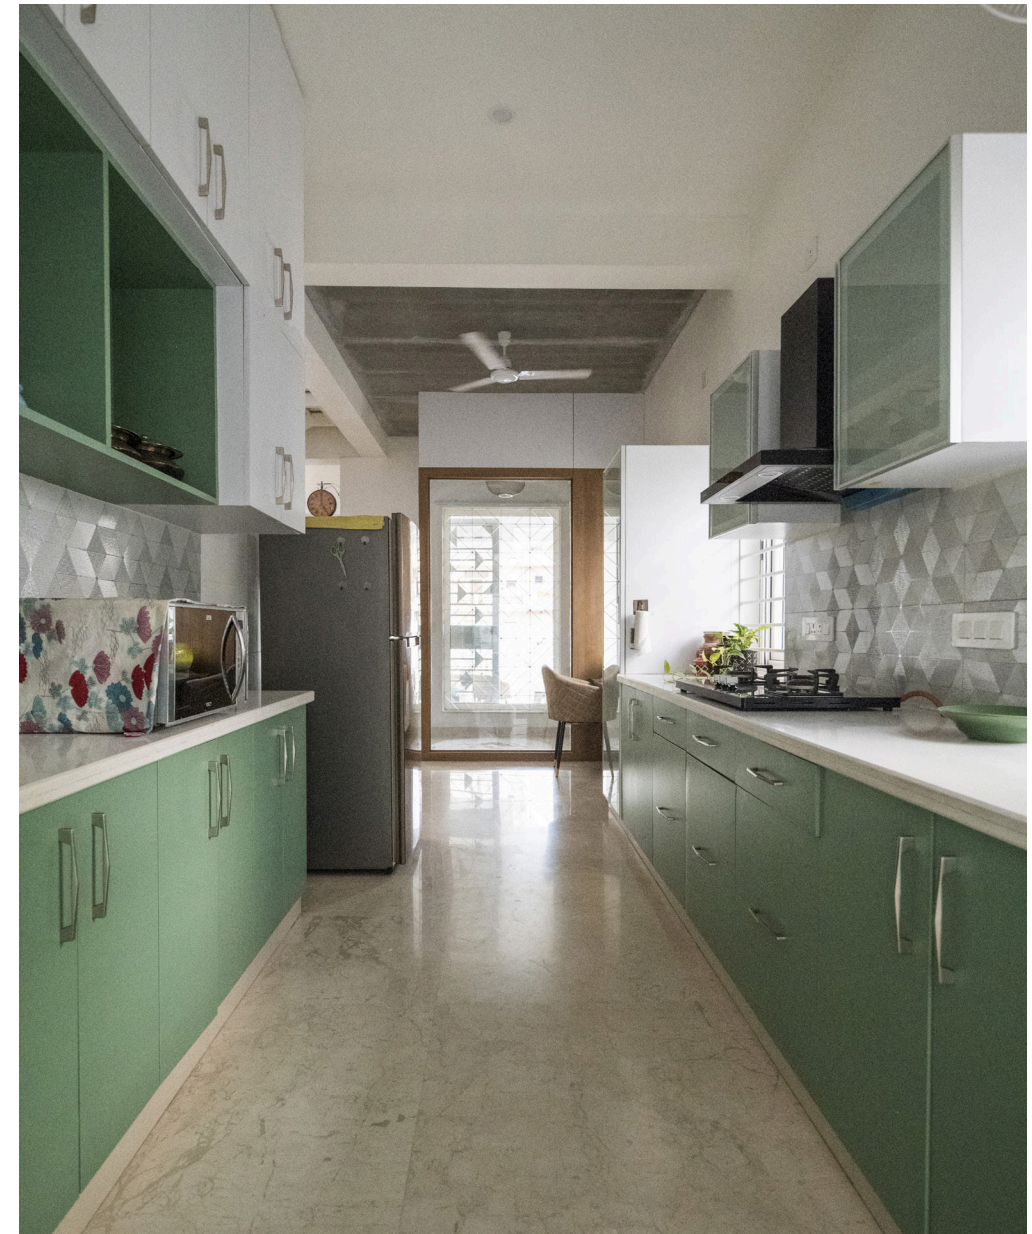

Ground Floor

The interior arrangement of the house comprises a living room, kitchen, guest room and a powder room on the ground floor, along with a lawn and parking space.

Living Room

The living room has a view to the green area. It has a clean large volume with light entering from all sides like the parking area, the lawn and the double-height skylight. The entire space comes together with the addition of minimalist furniture and subtle décor, done in part to allow openness to thrive. Flexible and moveable furniture in family spaces furthers this endeavor.

The Kitchen

The Kitchen was designed such that interaction can be facilitated from the dining and living. It also establishes visual connectivity to the main door and parking area. The kitchen has a utility area attached to it.

Dining

A 24’ tall double-heighted space is the core of the house. The dining table is placed centrally below the skylight. A white staircase in fabricated metal goes up to the first floor giving a floating effect. A feature wall of exposed brick lines the staircase and a combination of glass brick and terracotta brings in natural light throughout the day through the skylight.

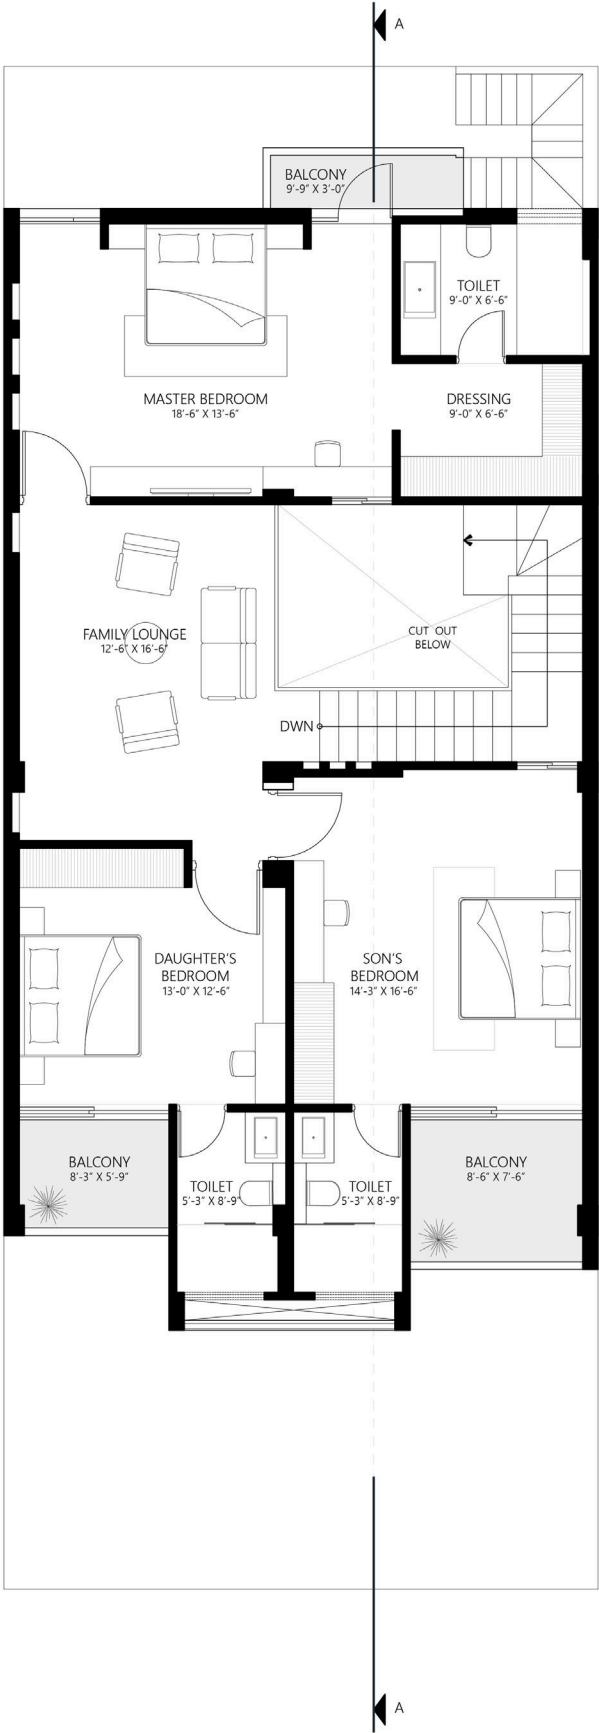

Pooja Room

The pooja room has a very minimal design. A simple wallpaper has been used on the background wall. This is the only wallpaper used in the entire house to give this space its own unique identity.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN

First Floor

The first floor has three bedrooms. In the front part of the site are two bedrooms for the kids that come attached with washrooms and balconies.

Daughter's Bedroom

Daughter's bedroom has a relatively smaller bed to give enough space to perform activities like art and craft. It has a balcony that gives a view of the front part and washroom attached to it.

Son's Bedroom

The son's bedroom was minimal with shades of gray and white and wooden textures. It also comes attached with a balcony and a washroom.

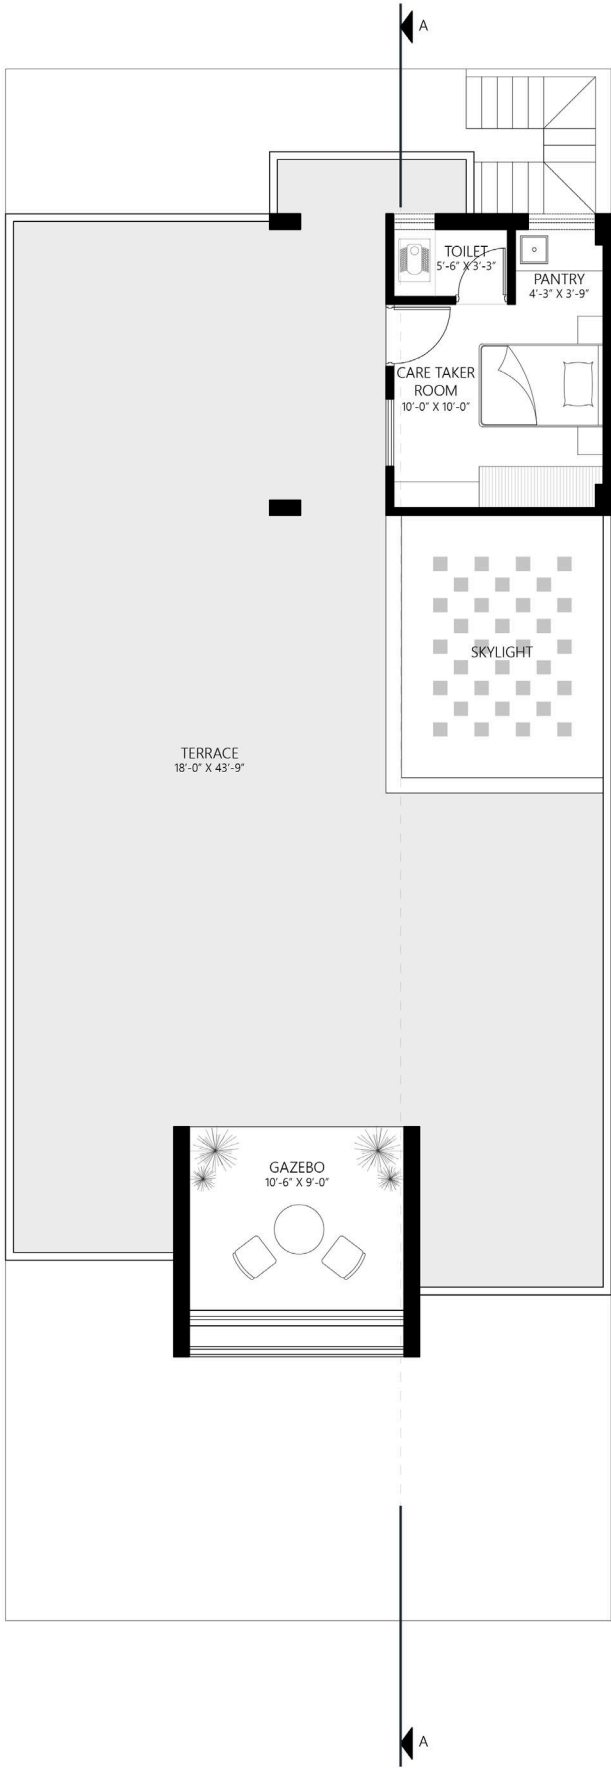

Master Bedroom

The master bedroom is tucked in the rear part of the plot. It has an attached balcony, dressing and washroom. Two wall windows flank either side of the bed. Three circular niches inspired from Rajasthani homes are accentuated by lights and subtle artworks. The console was refurbished from the client's older house and treated in white and gray to vibe with the rest of the room.

The master bedroom has a small study table placed next to a window which overlooks into the double height space. This window was added for connectivity from the room to the rest of the house.

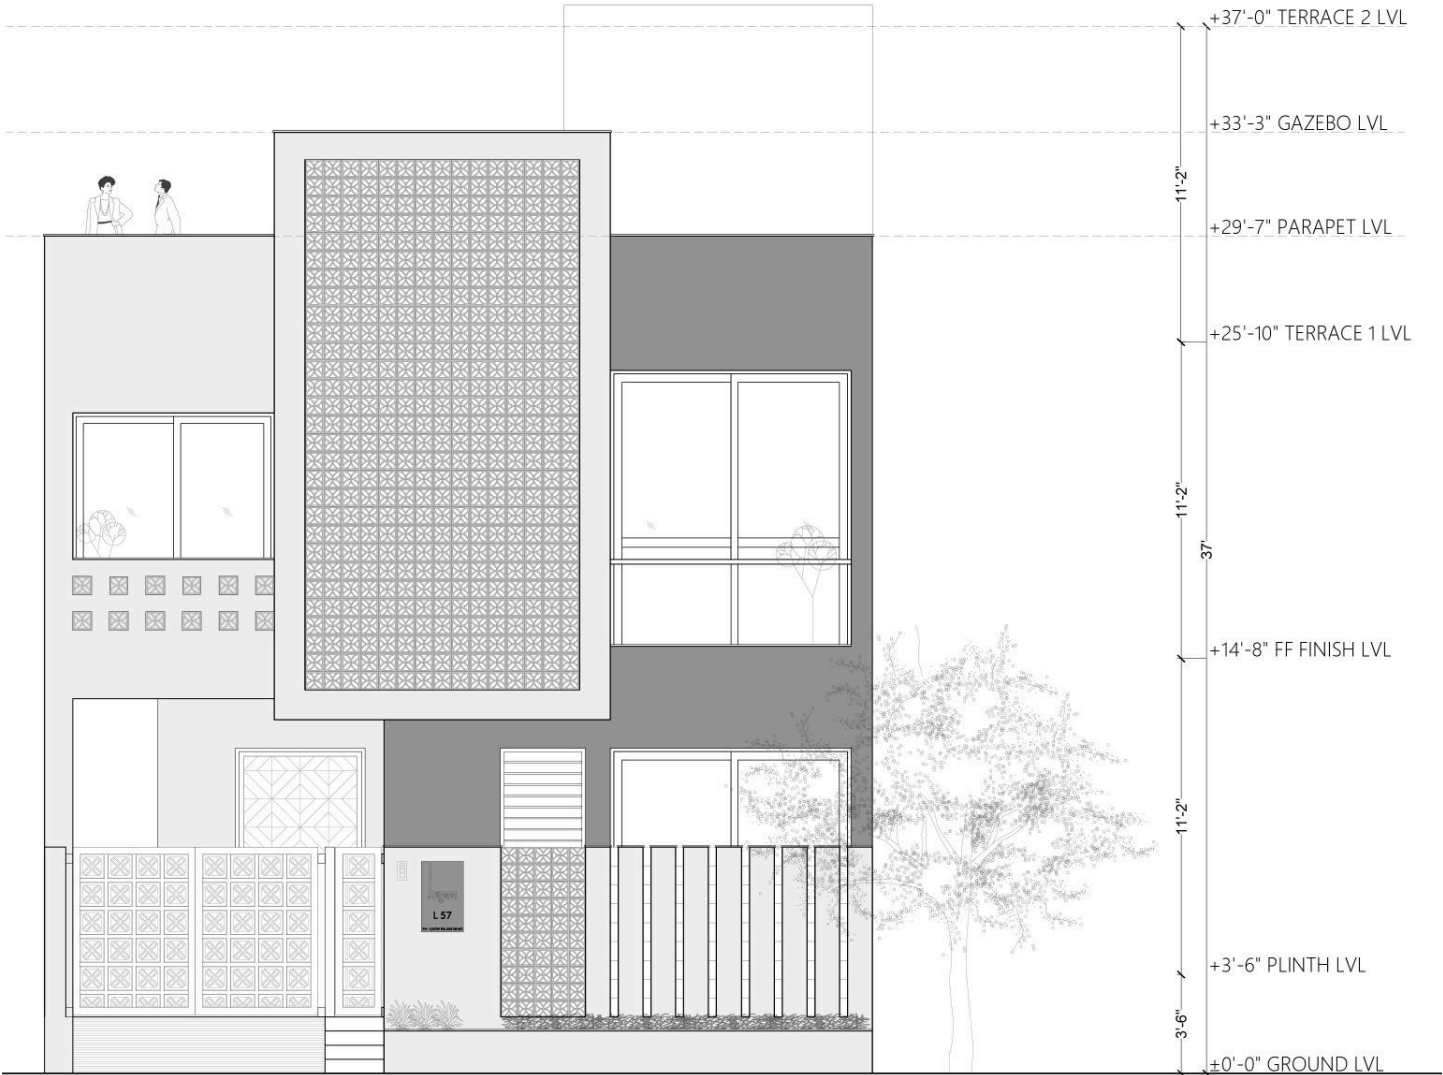

Second Floor Plan

Second Floor

The second floor is the terrace which has the caretaker’s room and the gazebo.

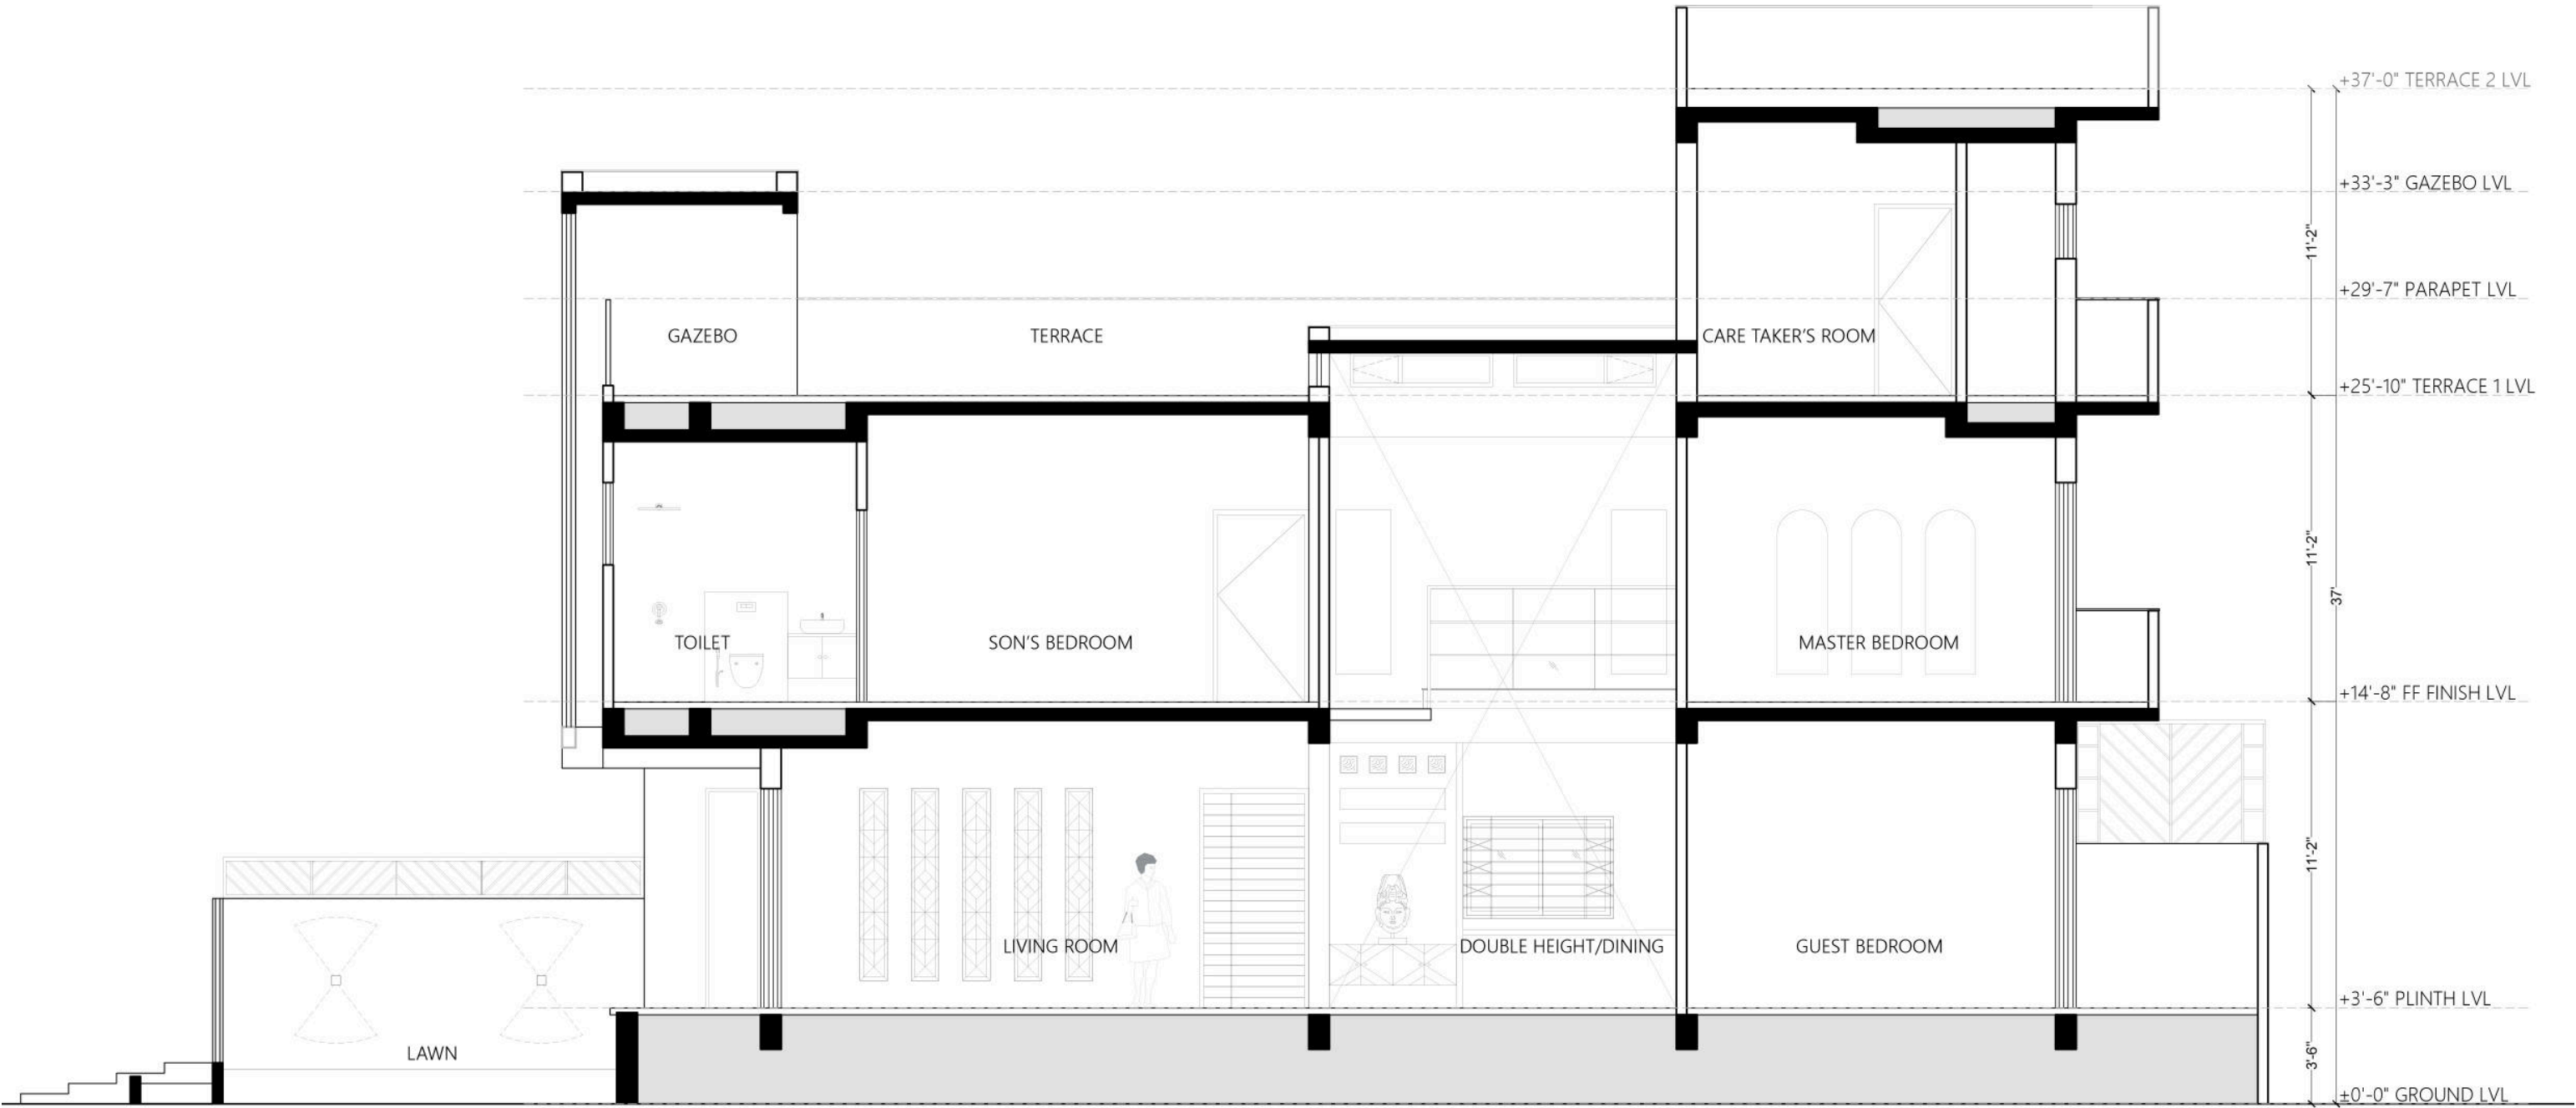

Front Elevation

Facade

The house itself has been designed to allow free passage of air throughout, achieved through strategically placed openings and a perforated screen acting as the main functional and aesthetic element. The screen in question, made of white painted terracotta blocks, spans the front facade and brings out the vertical volume of the house, in the process adding subtle detail to the refined whiteness of the structure. This austerity is contrasted by the lapato finish black and mint brown of the granite used for flooring and complemented by the yellow-green hues of the lawn in front.

Conclusion

A neutral colour palette characterizes the house. The exterior painted with textured granular white, allows the structure to blend in with its surroundings. It is as if the subtlety gives life to the openness of the entire volume, one can almost see the air traversing its expanse. Much like this world we live in, it is the simplicity of the house that highlights its intricacies.
